A Night Out in Greenwich: Comedy, Food and Drinks at Up the Creek

Looking for a complete night out in Greenwich? Up the Creek combines live comedy, food, drinks and late-night atmosphere just minutes from Cutty Sark DLR and Greenwich station.

Greenwich is one of London's easiest places to turn a single booking into a full night out. There is plenty to do before the show, transport is straightforward, and once the evening gets going you do not have to rush across town to find somewhere with a bit of atmosphere. At the centre of that is Up the Creek, where live comedy, food, drinks and late nights all come together under one roof.

Start the evening in Greenwich

Part of the appeal of a night out in Greenwich is that it feels different from heading straight into central London. The area has its own identity, with the river, historic streets, pubs, restaurants and the buzz around Cutty Sark all within easy walking distance.

That makes it easy to arrive a little early, meet friends nearby and ease into the evening rather than treating the show as the only part of the night. If you prefer to keep things simple, you can also head straight to Up the Creek and make the venue itself the starting point.

Food and drinks before the show

Food and drinks are available at Up the Creek, so there is no need to organise a separate restaurant booking unless you want to. You simply order at the venue, and vegetarian, vegan and halal options are available.

The advantage of eating at the club is obvious on a busy night: you arrive, get settled, grab something to eat and have a drink without worrying about finishing dinner in time to cross Greenwich before the show starts.

There is also something very natural about that rhythm for a comedy night. A drink, some food, a room filling up and the anticipation before the lights go down all become part of the experience rather than separate stops on an itinerary.

Why live comedy makes a great centrepiece for the night

Comedy works particularly well for groups because it gives the evening a focal point without making it overly formal. You can come as a couple, with friends, for a birthday, after work or simply because you want to do something more memorable than another night in a bar.

At Up the Creek, the programme runs across several nights each week, from established club nights and headline shows to newer acts and special events. That means the atmosphere changes depending on what you book, but the core experience stays the same: a proper live room, an audience reacting together and the possibility that something completely unexpected happens on stage.

Arrive early for the best experience

Seating at the club is generally unreserved and available on a first-come basis, so arriving in good time is worthwhile. It gives you more choice of seats and means you can enjoy the venue before the performance starts rather than arriving under pressure.

Current regular opening times are Thursday from 7:00pm, Friday from 6:00pm, Saturday from 7:00pm and Sunday from 6:30pm, although individual event details should always be checked when booking.

Getting to Up the Creek is easy

One of the practical advantages of choosing Greenwich for a night out is the transport. Up the Creek is at 302 Creek Road, Greenwich, London SE10 9SW.

Cutty Sark DLR is about a minute away on foot, while Greenwich station is around five minutes away. Several bus routes also serve the area, making the club straightforward to reach from different parts of London.

That matters more than it sounds. A good night out becomes much easier when nobody is spending half the evening working out complicated connections or worrying about a long walk after the show.

Make a night of it

If you are visiting Greenwich anyway, the best approach is not to rush. Come down early, have a walk around the area, meet for a drink, then head to the club for food and comedy. After the show, you are already in a part of London that has a genuine evening atmosphere rather than somewhere that empties the moment the performance finishes.

For birthdays, dates, groups of friends or simply a spontaneous night out, that combination is difficult to beat: one destination, a proper live event and enough going on around it to make the evening feel bigger than just a ticketed show.

Plan your night at Up the Creek
